HISTORIC LANDMARK COMMISSION APRIL 25, 2016 DEMOLITION AND RELOCATION PERMITS HDP-2016-0082-B 408 W. 38½ STREET

PROPOSAL

Demolish a ca. 1938 house.

ARCHITECTURE

One-and-a-half story, rectangular-plan, side-gabled, stone-veneered split-level house with front-facing stone-veneered gablet dormers, and a central entry framed with a stone lintel; the façade has a symmetrical composition with a pair of multi-light wood casement windows on each side of the entry; the lower set of windows is at ground level, and they are smaller than the primary windows in the front-facing gablets.

RESEARCH

The house was built in 1938 by Milton W. Kelley, an athletic trainer at the University of Texas, who later lived here with his wife, Ethel, in the 1960s. Until that time, however, the Kelleys rented the house out. In the early 1940s, the house was rented by Jack and Frances Hudspeth, both of whom were prominent in the field of education. Both Jack and Frances Hudspeth were public school teachers – Jack went on to be long-time educator in the Austin public schools, and then transitioned to writing textbooks for the Steck Company. Frances became an administrator at the University of Texas. She worked closely with Harry Ransom, and some say she was the driving force behind the establishment and construction of the Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center, acquiring, curating, and developing the now-world-famous collection. She became the managing editor of the Texas Quarterly in 1958, and continued her work with the University of Texas until her death in 1972. After renting this house, the Hudspeths moved to 2419 Hartford Road, where they remained for the rest of their lives. Unfortunately, that house has been remodeled beyond recognition.

In the mid-1940s, the house was rented by Henry C. and Ruth Meyer. Henry C. Meyer was a hardware store owner from Rockdale, Texas, who later served as a member of the State Board of Control in the 1930s. One of his sons, Bruce G. Meyer, also rented the house after his father passed away. Bruce G. Meyer was a book-keeper.

Finally, in the 1960s, the house was occupied by the original owners, Milton W. and Ethel K. Kelley, who were retired at the time they lived here.

STAFF COMMENTS

The house is not within the bounds of either the Hyde Park National Register Historic District nor the Hyde Park Local Historic District, but is listed in the Comprehensive Cultural Resources Survey (1984); it had no priority for research.

STAFF RECOMMENDATION

Staff strongly encourages the applicant to seriously consider preservation, adaptive re-use, and rehabilitation of this house on this site, as it is the only known house left in Austin associated with Frances Hudspeth, a dynamic force in the establishment of the Harry Ransom Center at the University of Texas. However, staff recognizes that the association of this house with the Hudspeths is relatively short-lived: they rented the house for about 5 years in the 1940s. If rehabilitation and adaptive re-use of this house is not feasible, then staff must recommend release of the permit upon completion of a City of Austin

Documentation Package, consisting of photographs of all elevations, a dimensioned sketch plan, and a narrative history, for archiving at the Austin History Center.

Obituary of Jack Hudspeth Austin American, November 29, 1972

From The Handbook of Texas:

HUDSPETH, FRANCES B. HELLUMS (1907–1972). Frances B. Hellums Hudspeth, museum administrator, curator, and librarian, was born on November 4, 1907, in Hico, Texas, the daughter of William E. and B. (Morgan) Hellums. While growing up she lived in several Texas cities, but by 1924 the family had settled in Austin. Frances Hellums graduated from Austin High School and subsequently taught in the high schools of Lamesa and Rising Star. She received a B.A. degree with honors from the University of Texas in 1933 and taught science in the Austin public schools from 1930 to 1939. She married Jack Chever Hudspeth on June 1, 1934. She began her association with the University of Texas in 1940 as an attendance clerk and continued as statistical clerk, administrative secretary, and executive assistant in the office of the dean of arts and sciences. During most of her university career she worked closely with Harry H. Ransom and served in his succession of offices. Ransom referred to her appreciatively as "the Colonel." In 1958 she began her official association with the Harry Ransom Humanities Research Center and the publication of the Texas Quarterly, of which she was managing editor from 1958 until her death. She handled a vast range of responsibilities for the growing Humanities Research Center, working on acquisitions with donors, estates, and dealers, and on the housing, sorting, and exhibiting of collections at a time when the HRC did not have a permanent home.

Hudspeth's wide experience helped her to bring her talents and energy to bear on her most important project, the task of putting together a central repository for the HRC. She and Ransom had unique insights into the needs of the center and on a daily basis attended to the work of architects, engineers, builders, furnishers, and staff members in every phase of construction. With Ransom she shared a remarkable knowledge not only of the holdings of the HRC in its formative years but of the many special collections such as the Cora Maud O'neal collection of French decorative arts, the library and study from the home of John Foster Dulles, and the Willoughby-Blake silver collection. She and Ransom planned the HRC building to house collections in rare books and manuscripts, theater arts, photography, and the history of science, as well as reading rooms, study rooms, a conservation lab, offices, and carrels for graduate students. Frances Hudspeth had a special interest in the first two floors, which house the James A. Michener Collection of Twentieth Century American Paintings. She was working on this part of the center at the time of her death in an Austin hospital on January 29, 1972. She was a self-effacing woman who shunned credit for her work. She lived a life of devotion to her family, the university, and books. She is buried beside the grave of her mother in Hico, Texas.
