PROPOSAL

Demolish a ca. 1915 house that is contributing to the historic district.

ARCHITECTURE

One-and-a-half story, side-gabled frame bungalow with a central, front-gabled dormer; full-width inset porch on square wood posts; multi-light fenestration, including Craftsman-style 24:1 windows on the main floor of the house.

RESEARCH

The house was built around 1915; the first known occupants were George T. and Esther Anderson, who lived here until George's death in 1918. George T. Anderson was a partner with his father in an ornamental iron and wire works. The house was then purchased by Edward W. and Lizzie Seiders, who lived here for a short time around 1920. Seiders listed his occupation in the city directory as a checker, but the 1920 U.S. Census, which shows them as the owners of this house, show him as a warehouseman for a refining company. From the early 1920s through the early 1930s, the house was owned and occupied by J.J. and Maude Wattinger. J.J. Wattinger was the son of Jacob Wattinger, a Swiss-born stonecutter who founded a general construction business. J.J. and Maude divorced prior to 1930, and J.J. went to live with his mother, Louise, at the Wattinger family home on Augusta Street. Maude Wattinger, who was the librarian for the Christian Science Reading Room in the Littlefield Building, continued to live in this house with two of her sons, Ralph and Maurice. After she moved away around 1933, the house was owned and occupied by Ralph and Virginia Wattinger, who lived here until around 1936. Ralph Wattinger was also in the family construction business, serving as a partner with his uncle Henry (H.E.) Wattinger in H.E. Wattinger and Company, general contractors. Ralph Wattinger was living in Decatur, Georgia in 1940, and at the time of J.J. Wattinger's death in 1945, he was living in Richmond, Virginia, where his mother, Maude, had also moved. From around 1936 until around 1942, the house was owned and occupied by another of J.J. and Maude's sons, Maurice, who lived here with his wife, Irma. Maurice was listed as a carpenter in the city directories for the time he and Irma lived in this house.

Jack Sucke, an insurance man, and his wife, Wheeler, lived in this house in the 1940s. The house was listed as vacant in the 1949 city directory, and in the early 1950s, it was converted to a duplex. Many of the tenants of the duplex were students, including Elliott Naishtat, while he was at the University of Texas.

STAFF COMMENTS

The house suffers from a serious state of deterioration due to years of neglect and having windows open to the elements for long periods of time.

STAFF RECOMMENDATION

Staff must recommend release of the permit upon completion of a City of Austin Documentation Package, consisting of photographs of all elevations, a dimensioned sketch plan, and a narrative history, for archiving at the Austin History Center. Staff does not question that the house has the architectural and the historical significance to be considered as a historic landmark, but the years of deterioration and neglect have rendered this house beyond the reasonable expectation of rehabilitation and restoration. The applicant for the demolition permit has contacted structural engineers and builders to determine the cost of rehabilitation, which is around $500,000.
