Originally constructed in 1953, the Davis Water Treatment Plant is a critical component of the Austin potable water system, producing potable water for the central, east and north parts of the city. Key functions at the plant are performed by original assets that are far beyond their expected useful life. Although the plant has undergone several process improvements over the years, much of the plant's electrical system has generally not been updated or rehabilitated since the original construction, and has deteriorated due to age and wear. This project will upgrade the electrical services to these process areas and replace outdated equipment. This project has been scoped and designed to improve these integral plant processes with minimal disruption to facility operations, thus significantly extending the useful life of the facility.

Major improvements generally include new 12,470 volt plant service cables from Austin Energy; a new incoming 15-KV substation building; conversion of in-plant distribution voltage from 4,160V to 12,470V; renovation of the chemical area switchgear/distribution; addition of 15-KV dedicated transformers for the Low Service Pump Station: new redundant 15-KV distribution cables and duct bank systems: renovation/upgrade of the plant administration and training buildings distribution system; and renovation of the emergency power distribution system. The project also includes raw water transmission line, chlorine line, and powdered activated carbon (PAC) line renovation.

The project is tentatively scheduled to begin in October 2016 and should be substantially complete in February 2020. Public communication to the affected areas has been continuous and is achieved through a combination of meetings, mailings and a website.

Due to the potential for unforeseen conditions or utility conflicts, a 10% contingency in funding has been included to allow for the expeditious processing of any change orders.

The bid documents include allowances for a security system and lining of an existing raw water transmission line.

The contract allows 1.230 calendar days for substantial completion of this project. This project is located within zip code 78731 (District 10) and managed by the Public Works Department.

T Morales Company Electric & Controls is located in Florence, Texas.
