Description of Recommendation to Council

The City of Austin Neighborhood Housing and Community Development (NHCD) Office has released their Draft Austin Housing Plan, a comprehensive approach to address Austin's most pressing housing challenges informed by input from the citizens of Austin. The Early Childhood Council is submitting the above recommendations to be included in the NHCD 2017-2018 Action Plan.

Rationale:

Families need access to quality child care centers in close proximity to their home. It not only helps a child's development but it also helps support parents who are struggling to balance work and family obligations. The location and availability of child care can affect other community development goals and activities including smart growth and sustainability planning initiatives. Furthermore, the City of Austin should align community plans where appropriate to strengthen the City's comprehensive

Imagine Austin plan. Lastly, the child care services currently funded by the CDBG grant are vital to teen parents, very low income families, and families facing homelessness. Maintenance of these dollars is critical to supporting families by removing barriers for accessing affordable, high-quality child care as families work towards establishing self-sufficiency.
