DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Joseph N. Preston and Son of Austin designed the Driskill Hotel in 1885. Preston utilized pressed brick dressed with white limestone to build the four story Romanesque Revival hotel. The plinth, course, impost, capitals, keys, carrels, dragons, and tables also are built of limestone. The capping elements at the top of each of the street facades are busts of limestone of Driskill and his two sons which were carved by unknown Italian artisans. The bust of A.W. (Tabe) Driskill caps off the west facade and the bust of J.W. Driskill caps the portico on Brazos Street while the bust of Colonel Driskill is the capping element for the main portico on East 6th Street. Ornate gargoyles also decorate the three street facades.

The main entrance features an arch covered corridor thirty-five feet wide which intersects at the rotunda with two thirty-one foot wide corridors. The original interior walls were plaster with walnut fixtures in the bar and billiard rooms which were located behind the office on the first floor. Gentlemen's and ladies parlors, 60'x30' were also located on the first floor.

Second floor features included four main chambers used primarily as meeting and dining rooms. Two of these rooms had balconies which overlooked the S.W. and S.E. porticos of the city. The tile in the fireplaces as well as most of the plateglass and hardware in the hotel were bought by Driskill and Preston on a trip to the East. Other interior materials and features included hydraulic elevators, twenty foot high sheet iron corrugated ceilings divided by finely carved pine beams which spanned the first floor corridors. The third and fourth floors were mainly hotel rooms and suites.

A twelve story annex built in 1930 and renovations done in 1947 and 1952 almost completely altered the interior of the hotel. The 1947 renovation included lowering the ceilings, installing another elevator, installing air-conditioning, and razing the Nalle Annex and building a five story addition with a penthouse. The twelve story 1930 addition remains on the north side of the old Driskill and serves as the front entrance.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Jesse Lincoln Driskill (1824-1890), born in Sparta, Tennessee, intended that his hotel become the finest in the South. When Driskill came to Texas in 1849 he entered the merchandising business in Bastrop, San Antonio, San Marcos, and Bryan. By 1857 he switched over to the cattle business where he became a prosperous rancher. During the Civil War he supplied beef for the Confederate Army and was one of the first ranchers to enter the cattle drives to the mid-western markets after the Civil War. The prosperous cattle baron moved to Austin in 1871 where he proposed his hotel scheme to the city fathers in 1884 and offered $7500 for the lots and building on Bois d'Arc, now 7th Street.

By 1885 construction began on the brick and limestone building which eventually cost Driskill $400,000. Five days before Christmas in 1886 the famous Driskill opened to the public. A special supplement to the Daily Statesman in Austin on December 17, 1886 bestowed accolades on Driskill's achievement and forecasted rapid progress of Austin because as the paper exclaimed "What a Bonanza Austin possesses in its new caravansary." The ad touted Austin as a vacation center in hopes that the hotel would, of course, be one of the main recipients of the increased tourism.

To most Austinites and many Texans the Driskill was an institution. And for travelers of the late nineteenth century the Driskill offered luxury accommodations at $2.50 to $5.00 per night for rooms and a full course meal for thirty-five cents. Austinites mingled with state dignitaries in the luxurious ball rooms when governors had their inaugurals. The first formal affair held at the Driskill was Governor Sul Ross' inaugural ball of 1887. After that state affair the proprietors of the Driskill expected and received the honor of hosting many state functions. For over thirty years the Driskill also was the setting for the annual homecoming ball of the University of Texas. These homecoming balls as well as the Spring "final balls" for the University of Texas were lavish events. Special porters kept fresh flowers cool throughout social functions while students and their guests warmed up on fifty to sixty gallons of whiskey. Such state and university social events took place in the ballrooms of the Driskill. The Crystal Ballroom with its fine crystal chandeliers and the Maxmillian Room with its eight gold leaf framed mirrors which once belonged to Carlotta and Maxmillian of Mexico were the most famous rooms.

Many state legislators annually headquartered at the Driskill up to its closing in September of 1969. President and Mrs. Johnson frequented the Jim Hogg Suite on their stays in Austin and used the Driskill as their election night center in 1964. Certainly during its eighty-three year existence (1886-1969) the Driskill Hotel became an integral part of the cultural and political fabric of the state. The Driskill was "an institution dedicated to the service of Austin and Texas" as its semi-centennial ad proclaimed in 1936.

In 1966 on the Driskill's 75th anniversary the Heritage Society of Austin chose it as one of the twelve most significant landmarks of Austin. That same year the Texas State Historical Survey Committee designated the Driskill Hotel as an historic landmark of Texas. Today the Driskill is endangered by its present owners who plan to raze it completely so that they can build a new hotel.

Dear Ms. Grosvenor:

Since the Driskill Hotel was accepted to the National Register in 1969, the Driskill Hotel Corporation has bought the hotel. A renovation of the building was done and presently Braniff International has the managing contract. The first two floors of the original structure are used for shops, restaurants, meeting facilities and offices, while the upper two floors contain hotel rooms. The 1930 high rise addition has also been modernized for room accommodations.

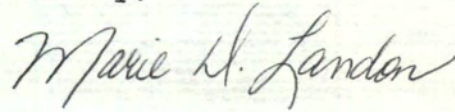

The Driskill Hotel is a four-story Richardsonian Romanesque hotel utilizing pressed brick dressed with rusticated white limestone. The original portion of the Driskill is a square shape with each of the four corners cut to provide diagonal entrances. In 1930 a high rise addition was joined to the north facade of the 1885 portion. A series of varying sized gables along the roofline define the organization of the exterior into bays and pavillions. On each facade there is a large central gable displaying the hotel's name "The Driskill" at the base. Two small crested gables flank the central one, while at each corner gables containing small round windows are at a 45° angle to further embellish the diagonally cut portions. Pitched roofs behind these gables meet the truncated hipped roof at right angles.

September 20, 1974

Another Richardsonian feature is the graduation in size of the arched windows from the large arches of the base which form an arcade to the series of small round arched windows of the top floor.

If you need information for other properties we will be glad to provide you with additional material.

Sincerely,
