

The Royal Arch Masonic Lodge was constructed in 1926 and designed by architects J. G. Daves and W. E. Ketchum. The load-bearing concrete structure has two types of exterior brick veneer: a scored, rough face, textured tan blend on the primary north and east facades, and an Austin common blend for the secondary, south and west facades.

The structure is built on a sloping site and is three full levels plus a full basement. The top level is partial and occupies the north half of the footprint; it aligns with the west façade and is stepped back 11'-5" from the east façade. There is a small elevator penthouse in the northwest corner.

The structure was designated a City of Austin Historic Landmark in 2000.
