Additional Backup Information:

The Art in Public Places Program’s Acquisitions and Deaccessioning Policy recommends best practices for regular assessments of the public art collection, and establishes criteria, policies and procedures regarding removing an artwork from the collection, or deaccessioning. Deaccessioning is a best practice within the museum and public art field and helps maintain a sustainable art collection.

The Arts Commission received requests for the deaccession of five (5) artworks at their regular monthly meeting on August 26, 2020, and approved initiation of the deaccession process for these five artworks, including “Moments” by Carl Trominski, 2003, at the Lamar Underpass; “Republic Square Fountain” by James Turner, 1988, at Republic Square Park; “LAB” by NextProject, 2009, along the bikeway from MOPAC to Airport Blvd.; “Bicentennial Fountain” by Ken Fowler, 1976, at Auditorium Shores and “Karst Circle” by W. Gary Smith, 2004, at Austin Fire Station 43/EMS Station 31.

Per the Deaccession Policy, the Arts Commission and the Art in Public Places Panel appointed a Special Jury of qualified members to assess the question of deaccessioning and make recommendations to the Arts Commission (jury membership listed below). The Deaccession Special Jury met on November 12, 2020, to review and make recommendations for each of the five artworks. The Special Jury recommended to deaccession “Moments” and dispose of the work through City of Austin surplus property procedures, specifying that the blue “signs” are not to be re-used in an artwork and that they are to be sold as scrap only.

Commissioned in 2003, “Moments” was funded by Hotel Occupancy Tax revenue, with a budget of $44,500 for the artwork. The request to deaccession “Moments” was presented by artist Carl Trominski in 2020 because the original lighting components were stolen and the artwork has been vandalized numerous times. After being reviewed by experts, this artwork was approved for deaccession. This problem is specifically noted in the Deaccession Policy as a reason to remove the artwork. This is a normal part of the public art process and helps maintain a safe and high quality art collection. The Special Jury recommended unanimously that “Moments” be deaccessioned.

The Arts Commission voted unanimously at their November 16, 2020, meeting to approve the deaccession of “Moments”. In addition, the Public Works Department has stated their support of the deaccession. To finalize the deaccession of “Moments”, in accordance with Deaccessions Policy, City Council must now vote on the item.

If City Council votes to accept the recommendation of the Arts Commission to deaccession “Moments”, the work will be disposed of through City of Austin surplus property procedures, and language will be added to the solicitation that states the blue fins are not to be re-used in an artwork; that they are to be used as scrap only.
