BASIS FOR RECOMMENDATION:

The house's near-pristine integrity enables it to clearly communicate its historical associations with the development of the Belmont subdivisions, the life and community impact of original owners Shirley and Jarrell Rubinett, the career of architects Lundgren & Maurer, and the character-defining features of Midcentury Modern residential architecture in Austin.

Architecture: This architect-designed Midcentury Modern house derives significance from both its historical associations and its architecture. The house is associated with prominent local and international architecture firm, Lundgren & Maurer. It is a rare surviving example of their residential design in Austin, exhibiting many of the key character-defining features of their style. Even if considered without the association with Lundgren & Maurer, the house holds architectural significance as an exceptionally intact example of the regional adaptation of Midcentury Modern architecture popularized in 1950s Austin. See pages F-9 and F-10 in the following application for additional architectural descriptions.

Historical Associations: The house is representative of significant trends in community planning and development and development in midcentury Austin, and it also is associated with significant individuals—Shirley and Jarrell “Tank” Rubinett—who played important roles in Austin’s business community and Jewish community in the late twentieth century. From the beginning of their time in Austin, Shirley and Jarrell Rubinett became deeply involved with Congregation Agudas Achim and Austin’s Jewish community. The house at 3004 Belmont Circle served as the nexus of the Rubinett family’s community involvement. The Rubinetts lived there for 60 years, from 1955 until 2015, and the house represents the most tangible representation of their significance extant in Austin today. See pages F-5 through F-8 in the following application for detailed discussions of development patterns and the Rubinett family.

HISTORICAL ASSOCIATIONS

Community Planning and Development

The 1955 Rubinett House at 3004 Belmont Circle stands in the Austin subdivision known as the “Belmont Addition.” The surrounding land originally fell within the George W. Spear league – a headright land grant awarded to Spear in 1838 to encourage settlement of immigrants in Texas. Over the years, subsequent landowners further divided the land. By 1891, the lot lay within the 175.75-acre estate owned by Judge John Woods Harris.⁵ Harris expanded his estate over time, owning at least 189 acres as late as 1910.⁶ In the decades to follow, Austin experienced tremendous population growth.⁷ Large landowners like Harris began subdividing their estates for suburban development as the city grew outward. Between 1910 and 1929, a number of houses cropped up in the area on lots ranging from about 2 acres to 10 acres.⁸ At some point during this era, the Harris estate was subdivided and the two lots that would become the Belmont Addition sold: a 2.15-acre tract sold to Arthur L. Carnahan and wife Elizabeth A. Carnahan, and an 18-acre tract sold to T. H. Williams, Jr. and wife Nancye T. Williams.⁹ Historic aerial photographs from 1940 indicate that these property owners constructed small residential estates near the banks of Shoal Creek. (See Attachment A-5, fig. A5-1; no longer extant.)

⁷ Census statistics show the population rising from around 30,000 residents in 1910, to about 53,000 in 1930, and about 132,000 in 1950. Meanwhile, Austin's first city plan, prepared by the firm of Koch & Fowler in 1927, called for improvement of Lamar Boulevard and construction of a series of bridges across Shoal Creek to make the land to the west accessible for denser suburban development.¹⁰ The Koch & Fowler plan zoned the land west of Shoal Creek for "Residential A" development, which allowed single-family development only and set requirements for minimum lot size, setbacks, and building heights.¹¹ Residential suburban development west of Shoal Creek quickly actualized. Just west of the present-day Belmont Addition, the Bryker Woods subdivisions cropped up between 1936 and 1946.¹² By 1950, houses occupied about 80 percent of the lots in the Bryker Woods neighborhood, but some slivers of land remained undeveloped and available to accommodate new construction to meet the growing need for housing amid Austin's post-World War II population boom – for example, the land owned by the Carnahan and Williams families. In 1951, developers W. L. Bradfield and G. H. Brush purchased the Carnahan parcel and a portion of the Williams parcel. That same year, Bradfield and Brush filed the plat for the "Belmont 1 Addition" (Attachment A-7, fig. A7-1). This land lay slightly west of Shoal Creek, with the Williams family retaining ownership of the land directly abutting the creek. Bradfield and Brush divided the land into 28 residential lots arranged along two cul de sacs – Belmont Parkway and Belmont Circle. The use of a street grid with cul de sacs corresponded with standards established by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), which required features thought to increase safety, like curvilinear streets, in order for developers to receive FHA-backed lending.¹³ Construction within the Belmont 1 Addition began by 1952 and continued through 1960 (Attachment A-7, fig. A7-2).¹⁴ Soon thereafter, the property at 3004 Belmont Circle sold to Bernice and Linden Jones, although the couple never constructed a home on the land.¹⁵ Shirley and Jarrell "Tank" Rubinett purchased the lot at 3004 Belmont Circle in 1954 and completed construction of their home in 1955. Also in 1955, Nancye and T. H. Williams subdivided the remaining portion of their land and filed the plat for "Belmont Section Two" (Attachment A-7, fig. A7-3). Construction in Belmont 2 proceeded from 1955 through 1957 (Attachment A-7, fig. A7-2).¹⁶

Today, both Belmont subdivisions lie just outside the bounds of the Old West Austin National Register Historic District.¹⁷ The Belmont subdivisions also are part of the Bryker Woods Neighborhood Association, which is encompassed by the Central West Austin Combined Neighborhood Planning Area.¹⁸

Shirley and Jarrell "Tank" Rubinett

The original owners of the house at 3004 Belmont Avenue—Shirley Ann Bagelman Rubinett and Jarrell David "Tank" Rubinett—played important roles in Austin's business community and Jewish community throughout the late twentieth century and into the early twenty-first century. The Rubinetts lived in the house at 3004 Belmont Circle for 60 years, from 1955 until 2015, and the house represents the most tangible representation of their significance extant in Austin today. Both Shirley and Jarrell Rubinett were Texas natives, descended from Russian Jewish immigrants. Jarrell was born in 1925 in Dallas, Texas, and Shirley was born around 1927, likely in Port Arthur, Texas. Jarrell lived in Dallas until at least 1943, when he was registered for the draft in World War

The Koch & Fowler Plan also notoriously segregated public amenities for non-white citizens in East Austin and recommended much more significant investment in public infrastructure and amenities—like the Shoal Creek bridges—in white areas. II. He studied mechanical engineering at the University of Texas, and he and Shirley Ann Bagelman were married in 1946 in her native Port Arthur.¹⁹ The couple moved to Austin by 1949, when city directories first list them living at 601 Manor Road. They welcomed their first child, Gordon Merrill Rubinett, shortly thereafter in 1950, followed by Benita Gail Rubinett in 1952 and Lynn Ellen Rubinett in 1957. By 1952, city directories list the family at 714 West 6th Street. The family moved to 3004 Belmont Circle in 1955.

Business Involvement

The Rubinetts' involvement in Austin's business community dates to their first arrival in Austin in 1949. That year, city directories list the Austin Candy Company, the first business founded by Jarrell Rubinett in Austin.²⁰ The Austin Candy Company occupied the building at 714 West 6th Street (present-day 716 West 6th Street, extant but extensively modified). By 1955, Rubinett founded his next business, the Austin Drug Company. City directories listed the Austin Drug Company's location as 511 East Avenue beginning in 1955. At the time, the neighborhood along East Avenue included a mixed-use commercial and residential district catering to Austin's Black and Mexican American communities. Throughout Texas and the US in the mid-twentieth century, Jewish merchants like the Rubinetts owned and operated businesses in minority neighborhoods, welcoming customers of all backgrounds, while most white merchants would not. Rubinett co-owned this business with Shirley's brother, Leonard Bagelman.²¹ The Austin Drug Company was a wholesale druggist and appears to have been a successful and prominent business in Austin. Rubinett and his employees appear to have been involved in the community beyond their workplace as well – a 1953 newspaper column reported on the company's participation in a local softball league with company teams.²² Between 1959 and 1962, the Texas Highway Department constructed Interstate Highway 35 (IH-35) along the former alignment of East Avenue, displacing numerous homes and businesses.²³ The building at 511 East Avenue fell within the path of IH-35, causing the Austin Drug Company to relocate to a new building at 2815 Manor Road, constructed in 1959 (extant but significantly altered).²⁴

By 1975, Jarrell and his wife Shirley founded yet another successful Austin business, originally called the Salvage Center, eventually renamed Special Sales. The Salvage Center had two locations – one at 2815 Manor Road (in the same building that housed the Austin Drug Company) and another at 4101B South Congress Avenue, just south of East Ben White Boulevard (no longer extant). Salvage Center sold discounted goods that were either on special close-out or dented in transit.²⁵ The store sold groceries as well as appliances, construction supplies, pharmaceuticals, and toys.²⁶ When the business became Special Sales, its function transitioned to supplying wholesale groceries; buying and reselling surplus foods from manufacturers and grocery stores.²⁷

The Rubinetts clearly had developed relationships with wholesale merchants over many years, so they were in a unique position to provide both discounted and full-price goods to the Austin community. In 1974, the board of the University State Bank in Austin elected Jarrell Rubinett as a member, indicating his stature and clout in the business community by that point in his life.²⁸ By 1982, Jarrell slowly began transitioning leadership of the business to his wife, Shirley, and son Gordon, designating Gordon as Vice President and Shirley as Treasurer.²⁹ By 1997, Gordon had left his law practice to run the family company.³⁰ The business remained at the family's core into the twenty-first century. Upon Jarrell Rubinett's death in 2014, his obituary remarked that he was a

“salesperson extraordinaire,” whose favorite saying was “‘Always give a person the opportunity to say no,’ but he rarely took no for an answer.”³¹

Community Involvement

From the beginning of their time in Austin, Shirley and Jarrell Rubinett became deeply involved with Congregation Agudas Achim and Austin’s Jewish community. During the mid-twentieth century, the congregation worshipped at 4300 Bull Creek Road, approximately two miles northwest of the Rubinett House (building no longer extant, congregation now located at 7300 Hart Lane). The Rubinett’s business success and giving nature allowed them to be valuable and impactful leaders in their Jewish community and beyond. Jarrell served two terms as president of the congregation at Agudas Achim.³² The congregation sometimes even called upon Rubinett to serve as a lay rabbi or cantor as needed.³³

The house at 3004 Belmont Circle served as the nexus of the Rubinett family’s community involvement. The house was designed with flowing open spaces conducive to entertaining, and the earliest newspaper records documenting the family’s activism in the Jewish community date from 1955 – the same year that they moved into the house at 3004 Belmont Circle. That year, Shirley Rubinett took charge of the invitations for the Father’s Day brunch hosted by the Sisterhood Agudas Achim.³⁴ Soon after, in 1961, Jarrell Rubinett hosted visiting Rabbi Donald David Crain from Chicago at the house to give a talk about “Views on a Complete Congregational Program.”³⁵ From 1962 to 1963, Congregation Agudas Achim constructed a new building on Bull Creek Road, relocating from their downtown synagogue at Seventh and San Jacinto Streets to the suburbs northwest of downtown, where Jewish families like the Rubinetts increasingly were moving.³⁶ At that time, Jarrell Rubinett served as vice president of the congregation’s board of directors—charged with raising funds for the new building—and Shirley served as the president of Sisterhood Agudas Achim. President Lyndon Baines Johnson dedicated the new building in December 1963, and Jarrell Rubinett signature marks the letter thanking the President for his attendance (Attachment A7, fig. A7-4).³⁷ In 1967, Jarrell went on to serve as a member of the board of the Jewish Community Council of Austin Pre-School.³⁸ Rubinett’s philanthropic activities spread beyond just their Jewish community, and in 1982 he loaned $25,000 to a citizens group fighting a movement to allow landlords to discriminate based on sexual orientation of prospective tenants.³⁹ His wife Shirley shared his commitment to the Jewish community and served as the chair of the cultural committee of the Jewish Community Council of Austin, bringing the Israeli Hassidic Festival to Austin in 1984.⁴⁰ In 1997, Jarrell helped start the Aytz Chaim Foundation, an endowment for members of Congregation Agudas Achim who did not have the funds for educational, cultural, and religious opportunities and programming.⁴¹ In retirement, he also co-founded a project that donated books on Judaism to Texas public libraries in rural areas where residents may never have met a Jewish person. Based in the anti-Semitic treatment Rubinett had received as a child in Dallas, he started the project because, “My thought is, if you educate people and let them read for themselves... they’ll learn the truth.”⁴² In February 2004, Congregation Agudas Achim held the “Rubinett Gala” to celebrate the couple’s lifetime of service to the congregation, documenting the significant contributions of Shirley and Jarrell Rubinett with an award and a City of Austin official proclamation presented by Mayor Will Wynn (Attachment A7,

ARCHITECTURE

In addition to significance for its historical associations, the house at 3004 Belmont Circle also hold significance for its architecture – both its association with Austin architecture firm Lundgren & Maurer and its exemplification of the Midcentury Modern architectural style.

Lundgren & Maurer

The architectural firm of Lundgren & Maurer formed in Austin in 1953 as a partnership between Leonard John Lundgren and Edward Joseph Maurer Jr. Both Lundgren and Maurer were of the same generation as Shirley and Jarrell Rubinett. Like Jarrell, Lundgren and Maurer both served in World War II and moved to Austin afterward, embracing the spirit of growth and modernism that the city embodied at the time. Lundgren was born in 1918 in Del Valle, Texas, and after serving in the air force and working at a navy ship-building office in Indiana, moved to Austin to study at the University of Texas. He graduated with a bachelor's degree in architecture in 1949.⁴⁴ Lundgren began practicing architecture directly after graduating, helped by recommendations from one of his UT professors, and his practice grew quickly.⁴⁵ His future partner, Edward Joseph Maurer, Jr. was born in 1921 in Nyack, New York, and also served in the air force during World War II. He studied architecture at the University of Texas as well, graduating in 1950.⁴⁶ After working for a few years for a different Austin architect, he approached Maurer about the possibility of working as partners. The two formed Lundgren & Maurer in 1953, with offices at 1003 West 24th Street (no longer extant). Lundgren acted as senior partner, handling client relationships, seeking projects, and reviewing designs. Maurer was responsible for much of the drawing and designing.⁴⁷ From the mid-1950s through the early 1970s, Lundgren & Maurer designed a rich catalog of Midcentury Modern and Contemporary buildings in the Austin area and beyond, as detailed in Attachment A-4 (table A4-1). Lundgren served as a member of the Austin Chapter of Texas Architects, the American Institute of Architects, the Austin Mayor's Advisory Committee on the Capitol Plan, and President of the Austin Chapter of the Texas Fine Arts Association. He also taught senior-level studio architecture classes at UT.⁴⁸ Meanwhile, Maurer, who was passionate about beautifying and revitalizing commerce in the downtown area and interested in preventing shoppers' exodus to suburbs, proposed that Congress Avenue become akin to a shopping mall.⁴⁹ Lundgren & Maurer's partnership dissolved in 1976, although each partner practiced independently thereafter. Lundgren formed Lundgren & Associates, continuing the practice of global large-scale hotel design until his death in 2012. Maurer also practiced architecture until his death in 1987.

Lundgren & Maurer began their careers working in the International and Midcentury Modern architectural styles, designing single-family homes as well as commercial and institutional buildings. The firm's early designs often used slender steel columns, cantilevered roof forms, large swaths of window glazing, and use of stone accent walls. By the 1950s, the Modern style still seemed innovative to most of the American public, even though some notable examples of architect-designed Modernism already dotted the Austin landscape, and a pared-down Ranch style—derived from Modernism—characterized most prefabricated residential subdivisions.⁵⁰ The Rubinetts' choice of Lundgren & Maurer to design their home likely communicated a willingness to break from history and try something new. The design that Lundgren & Maurer developed for the Rubinett House incorporated many of the key character-defining features associated with the Midcentury Modern style – including its low-pitched roof, wide swaths of glass, and integration of the indoors and outdoors (Attachment A-4, figs. A4-5, A4-6, A4-7, and A4-8).

The Rubinett House

The Rubinett House is a prime example of the application of character-defining features of the Midcentury Modern style to residential architecture in Austin in the 1950s. As shown by the original architectural drawings of the house (Attachment A-4, figs. A4-5, A4-6, A4-7, and A4-8), Lundgren & Maurer took special care to adapt their design to the site at 3004 Belmont Circle, as well as to the needs of the growing Rubinett family.

The original Lundgren & Maurer site plan shows how the architects considered the curving approach to the house via the Belmont Circle cul de sac. The lot slopes upward toward the rear (west), and the architects set the house back toward the rear of the lot. Since visitors would approach the house from an oblique angle, the architects gave the house a cruciform footprint, lending depth and visual interest to the view looking either southwest or northwest (Attachment B, photos 1–2). In keeping with Modern and Ranch architectural influences of the day, Lundgren & Maurer kept the house's mass low, with a low-pitched cross-gabled roof. On the front (east) elevation of the house, Lundgren & Maurer articulated the projecting ell with floor-to-ceiling windows of fixed “crystal sheet glass” set in wood frames (as noted in Attachment B, photo 3). In the yard, in front of the projecting ell, a seven-foot-tall garden wall constructed of limestone rubble masonry provided privacy while maintaining a glimpse of the eaves and roofline behind (Attachment B, photos 1–5). The architects focused their architectural emphasis on the eaves and roofline since these elements could be seen from the street. The roof structure used exposed joists with carved ends is reminiscent of Japanese architecture, which influenced many Midcentury Modern architects. The roofs on the front and rear projecting ells also feature a pergola at the ends—constructed from two rows of rafters without roofing on top—allowing light to filter through and creating visual depth. The setback portions of the front façade intentionally receive less detail, with simple plywood siding and narrow windows set under the eaves so that they appear to fade into the background.

On the interior, Lundgren & Maurer designed a highly practical floorplan for the growing Rubinett family. The central portion of cruciform plan—running from southeast to northwest—contained the house's public-facing spaces. Within this central core, a living room, dining room, kitchen, and den flowed together in an open plan that intelligently inserted grade changes, room dividers, and built-in cabinetry to differentiate one “room” from the next (Attachment B, photos 6–10). Both the living room and den opened onto outdoor spaces with glass doors, allowing integration of the indoor and outdoor living spaces. The house's service-oriented spaces, including the laundry room and garage, fell to the northeast of the central core. Three bedrooms and two bathrooms were arranged to the southwest of the central core.

The practicality and beauty of the Rubinett House have facilitated continuous residential use of the house with very few alterations. As the Rubinett family grew, they constructed a fourth bedroom and additional bathroom nestled into the southwestern corner of the house in 1966. The original building permit for the addition notes Ben Goldstein as the contractor (Attachment A-7, fig. A7-6).⁵¹ The addition transformed the house's footprint from a cruciform shape to more of a T-shape, as visible when contrasting aerial photos from 1966 and 1977 (see Attachment A-5, fig. A5-3). At the same time, the Rubinett family shifted the back patio to the northwest rear corner of the house and extended the rear eaves and pergola over the new patio. This rear addition is hidden from view from the street and does not adversely impact any of the house's original character-defining architectural features. Other alterations are limited to replacement of the original front door and original garage door, both of which occurred under the Rubinett's ownership, as shown in a 2015 photo of the house (Attachment A-5, fig. A5-4). Comparison of the original architectural drawings with the 2015 photo shows replacement of the original flat-panel front door with a simple glazed front door, as well as replacement of the original vertical-paneled garage door with a prefabricated metal garage door with traditional molded panels. The current homeowners replaced the metal garage door with a vertical-paneled wood garage door that resembles the door shown in original architectural drawings. The glazed front door is in keeping with the simple Modern aesthetic of the house and remains intact today. The door's visibility is minimal, given its recessed location under the deep eaves and setback behind the projecting front ell, and does not detract from the overall integrity of the

4 SUMMARY

6 The Rubinett House stands today as an exceptionally intact example of a Midcentury Modern single-family home
7 in Austin. The house's near-pristine integrity enables it to clearly communicate its historical associations with the 8 development of the Belmont subdivisions, the life and community impact of original owners Shirley and Jarrell
9 Rubinett, the career of architects Lundgren & Maurer, and the character-defining features of Midcentury Modern
10 residential architecture in Austin. The house at 3004 Belmont Circle is the single remaining building that best
11 communicates each of these historical associations. Many of the surrounding houses in the Belmont
12 subdivisions have been demolished or altered, and none approach the degree of integrity retained by 3004
13 Belmont Circle. The buildings associated with the business career of Jarrell Rubinett all have been demolished
14 or altered, and the building that historically housed Congregation Agudas Achim has been demolished as well.
15 The house survives as a rare, intact example of the work of Lundgren & Maurer as well. Although Lundgren &
16 Maurer were prominent Austin architects, many of their works have been demolished, and none of their homes
17 are known to be designated as Austin landmarks. Together, these considerations demonstrate that the Rubinett
18 House at 3004 Belmont Circle meets the City of Austin criteria for historic zoning, helping to facilitate its 19 preservation for years to come.

RUBINETT, Jarrell "Tank"

Jarrell "Tank" Rubinett, 88, husband, father, grandfather, business person, philanthropist, mentor and active member of the Austin Jewish community for almost 70 years died on March 29, 2014. He is survived by his wife of 67 years, Shirley, and his children, Gordon and Susan Rubinett, Benita Rubinett and Larry Elsner, and Lynn Rubinett and Rick Levy. He was proudest of his grandchildren, Sara Rubinett and Nicole Roberts, Sophie Elsner, Rose, Isaac, and Jesse Levy-Rubinett.

He was born in Dallas on August 28, 1925 and came to UT, where he earned a degree in Mechanical Engineering. He founded Austin Candy Company, Austin Drug Company and later Special Sales. He was a salesperson extraordinaire. His favorite saying was, "Always give a person the opportunity to say no," but he rarely took no for an answer. He was a leader of Congregation Agudas Achim. He twice served as President and helped to found the Aytz Chaim Foundation to fund educational and cultural opportunities for members of the congregation. He was often called upon to serve as a lay rabbi and cantor as needed, and for many his voice and his spirit were a highlight of services. In retirement, he founded Aytz Chaim Book Project, devoted to placing Jewish books in rural and school libraries across Texas. He was learned, ethical, and passionate in all of his dealings. He made friends in unusual places and had a zest for people and for life itself. He never read the obituaries.

Services will be held on Monday, March 31 at Congregation Agudas Achim, 7300 Hart Lane at 11:00 a.m. Interment to follow.

The family wishes to thank Ace Alsup, M.D. and Donna Walker for their dedication and compassion over the years. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Aytz Chaim Foundation, 7300 Hart Lane, Austin, TX 78731.
