Good afternoon,

I'm reaching out in response to a Notice of Public Hearing for a demolition permit at 6801 Burnet Rd. I notice that the location in question, which the notice designates as potentially having historical significance, is already actively being demolished before the 2/28 hearing (photos attached, taken this afternoon from the Marq on Burnet parking garage).

While I have no issue with repurposing that land and no intention of opposing anything, I am a bit concerned that this developer would demolish everything before the permit hearing. I'm not sure if these hearings are simply pro forma or not, but if a developer is cutting corners early on with permitting, it worries me about what they'll do when they actually start building -- and if anyone were to wish to speak against demolition at the permit hearing, there's no longer a building to speak about in the first place.

Thanks,

Tyler Faust
