WHEREAS, the present inability of attending City of Austin first responders to fully and immediately effectively understand all people in their preferred manner of communication can create critical gaps in understanding communications including during emergencies; and

WHEREAS, providing reliable and accurate means of communication between first responders and the people they interact with is essential so Deaf residents are fully included throughout Austin, Texas public life; and

WHEREAS, all Austin residents do have a right to receive reliable and appropriate first responder City of Austin services in the language which they best understand and are the native speakers of; and

WHEREAS, equity is not realized in the City of Austin unless first responders can first fully and clearly communicate with Deaf residents at a rescue site in their preferred language; and

WHEREAS, clearly explaining to Deaf individuals the City of Austin emergency services they are receiving in the language they best understand at a treatment site is a government which works for all; and

WHEREAS, clearly explaining to Deaf individuals the City of Austin emergency services they are receiving at a treatment site immediately following the accident is also open government.
