

MEMORANDUM

TO: Parks and Recreation Board

FROM: Kimberly McNeeley, CPRP
Director, Austin Parks and Recreation Department

DATE: February 15, 2024

SUBJECT: Renaming Proposal for Barton Springs Bathhouse

This memorandum serves as the Austin Parks and Recreation Department's (Department) conclusion to the 90-day community engagement period following an application to rename the Barton Springs Bathhouse to the Joan Means Khabele Bathhouse at Barton Springs. This memo, the attached application (Attachment A), community input report (Attachment E), and additional back up documents are submitted in accordance with Austin City Code of Ordinances.

Process for Renaming a Park

The process for naming or renaming a park facility is in Austin City Code of Ordinances section 14-1-36, section 14-1-37, and section 14-1-39. On October 20, 2023, the Parks and Recreation Department director notified the Parks and Recreation Board, City Manager, and City Council of an application (Attachment A) to rename the Bathhouse at Barton Springs to the Joan Means Khabele Bathhouse at Barton Springs, which began a 90-day period to receive public comment. The 90-day period ended on January 18, 2024. During that time, the department's Communications and Engagement Unit performed the following actions:

- Notified the community of the naming proposal through several outlets:
 - email notification
 - social media notification
 - in-person "pop-up" events at Barton Springs Pool
- Developed and distributed a survey that allowed community members to indicate support or nonsupport of the bathhouse renaming proposal.

Following the 90-day period, the director is required to submit the application and any other nominations or endorsements to the Parks and Recreation Board.

The Bathhouse at Barton Springs

The Barton Springs Bathhouse was built in 1947 replacing an earlier wooden structure at the same location. The one-story masonry building is attributed to Dan Driscoll, with support from Delmar Groos.

The building style is Streamline Moderne, which is a late Art Deco style characterized by curving forms and horizontal lines. The building is architecturally and historically significant and is a State Antiquities Landmark and listed to the National Register of Historic Places.

Names Associated with the Bathhouse

Two other names associated with the Bathhouse are B.J. “Buster” Robinson Sr. and Beverly S. Sheffield:

- In 1987, the Austin City Council Resolution number 870319-15 approved naming “a portion of Barton Springs Bathhouse in Zilker Park (old office and two basket rooms) the B.J. ‘Buster’ Robinson Sr., Information Center” (Attachment B).
- An application for the naming of the Beverly S. Sheffield Education Center was sent to City Council on May 8, 1997. There is no record in City Council minutes from 1997 reflecting the naming process. The application is attached (Attachment C). An Austin-American Statesman article from June 16, 1997 (Attachment D) confirms the naming.

Both naming processes preceded Austin’s current code, but most align with what is defined in current code as a “park feature:”

“PARK FEATURE means a recreational improvement that is not considered a park facility and is a major component of a park facility.” (Code 14-1-36)

From the research conducted by the Department, the City has not undertaken a formal naming process for the Barton Springs Bathhouse building in its entirety. Should the decision be made to rename the Barton Springs Bathhouse, as outlined in the application, it is appropriate for the existing feature names to remain.

Joan Means Khabele Background

Joan Means Khabele was born in Austin, Texas, during a time when the City of Austin segregated the city’s neighborhoods and public amenities through the systematic enactment of racist policies. Communities of people of color thrived and formed vibrant, dynamic, and close-knit communities in East Austin despite the injustices of racial segregation. Parks were segregated by race during this era, and Black Austinites were not permitted to swim at Barton Springs. In 1954, the Supreme Court ruled in Brown v. Board of Education that separating children in public schools based on race was unconstitutional. In 1956, Ms. Khabele, the oldest child of civil rights activists Bertha Sadler Means and James Means, was one of the first Black students to enroll at all-white Austin High School. When Ms. Khabele and other Black students were denied the opportunity to swim at Barton Springs during the Austin High School annual senior picnic, she protested by jumping in the pool despite policies forbidding Black people to swim in a pool designated for only white people. Ms. Khabele, along with other activists, bravely defied the segregationist policies of the time during these “swim ins,” which eventually led to the integration of Barton Springs pool and other recreational facilities in the city. As a young adult, Ms. Khabele earned degrees from the University of Chicago and UCLA, worked in the Peace Corps, and taught in several African countries. She later returned to Austin, where she raised three children and had eight grandchildren. Ms. Khabele passed away in 2021. More information is available in the submitted application for renaming the Bathhouse.

Community Engagement

The Department recognized the wide interest in the renaming proposal for the Bathhouse as a city-wide facility. During the 90-day period, the Department notified the stakeholders contact list from the Zilker Park Vision Plan process, posted multiple social media posts, and connected with key individuals, such as the Khabele family. Alongside the Barton Springs Bathhouse Rehabilitation team, staff members were at in-person pop-up events on October 24, 2023, in both the morning and evening.

Interested community members were encouraged to indicate whether or not they supported the application for renaming the Bathhouse. Additionally, individuals were encouraged to share comments.

Community Survey Results Show Significant Support

The survey tool logged 1,378 views with 315 participants. Overall results showed significant support for renaming the facility with 86% of respondents endorsing the renaming and 14% not in support (307 responses to this question).

Comments Supporting Renaming

A review of the 204 comments on the survey indicates overwhelming support of the proposal to rename the bathhouse after Joan Means Khabele. Comments primarily touch on the positive qualities of Ms. Khabele and the ways she influenced people's lives.

Comments Against Renaming

There were 20 of the 204 comments that did not indicate support for the bathhouse renaming. Following are the responses that the Department determined were not in support of the proposed renaming:

- 13 comments expressed explicit nonsupport of renaming the bathhouse:
 - 5 centered around not changing Austin or erasing "Old Austin."
 - 3 cited Buster Robinson's name in the Bathhouse as the reason.
 - 1 called the renaming "political."
 - 2 suggested reserving the space for an Indigenous name.
 - 1 suggested a different name.
 - 1 said, "No. Nope. Nay. Negative."
- 7 Comments expressed concern about the renaming proposal:
 - 4 expressed concern that the Bathhouse already had an association with Buster Robinson's name.
 - 2 suggested naming the surrounding site for an Indigenous name rather than a focus on only the Bathhouse.
 - 1 expressed a desire to choose from more than one proposed option.

All comments can be reviewed in Attachment E.

Next Steps

According to section 14-1-39\(H\), after receiving this memorandum, the Parks and Recreation Board shall schedule and conduct a public hearing on renaming the Bathhouse at Barton Springs. The Board shall make a written recommendation to City Council not later than the 45th day after receiving this memorandum, which is March 31, 2024. If the board does not meet the deadline, the Board will be deemed to have made no recommendation.

City Council will make the final decision thereafter.

Naming the Barton Springs Pool Bathhouse for Joan Means Khabele

The proposal to recognize Joan Means Khabele by gracing the bathhouse at Barton Springs Pool with her name carries an extraordinary potential to inspire. Joan's youthful valor, marked by her resolute stand against segregation, sparked a movement that rippled through the civil rights era. Her tenacity not only reshaped the heart of our city but also paved the way for the desegregation of Barton Springs Pool—making it a place of joy for all and a beacon of change, inclusivity and unity for our community.

The bathhouse at Barton Springs Pool should be named to honor Joan Means Khabele because her courageous leadership when she was a teenager to protest segregation at the pool sparked the civil rights era swim-ins that eventually led to the desegregation of Barton Springs Pool. Her actions touched the hearts of the city, changed our city's values and led to the desegregation of the pool.

Joan was born October 22, 1942 at Holy Cross Hospital in east Austin. She attended Blackshear Elementary School and Kealing Junior High. She was among the third group of students to integrate Austin High School in the late 1950s. In her senior year, after not being allowed to swim at her high school senior picnic, she was the first Black person to jump into Barton Springs Pool in an act of civil disobedience. In doing so, she sparked a movement of swim-ins that took place on a weekly basis throughout the summer of 1960.

Joan opposed segregationist policies forbidding black Austinites from swimming in Barton Springs Pool. She organized her classmates to sign petitions and led a protest at an Austin City Council meeting. She led the first swim-in at Barton Springs Pool during her senior class picnic held at Zilker Park. Joan organized multiple swim-ins where Austin High School students were joined by students from Huston-Tillotson University, The University of Texas at Austin and St Edwards University in protest of segregation leading to the desegregation at Barton Springs Pool and Zilker Park years before passage of the 1964 federal civil rights laws.

The City of Austin proclaimed April 9, 2022 as Joan Means Khabele Day in the City of Austin and held a ceremony to honor her at Barton Springs Pool attended by the Mayor of Austin, several City Council Members, members of Joan's family, as well as many other community members excited to recognize Joan and her valuable contribution to making Barton Springs a place of beauty open for all Austinites and visitors from around the world to enjoy.

Joan's activism began in the 1950s when she was among the third group of students to integrate Austin High. She remained active in the civil rights movement after graduating from the elite University of Chicago and she later earned a master's degree in African Studies from the University of California, Los Angeles.

After tutoring kids in Chicago, Joan joined the Peace Corps and moved to Ethiopia. After her return to the US, she met her husband, Dr. Paseka Edwin Khabele, who is from South Africa, while he was earning his doctorate at Fordham University in New York City.

Joan founded the African Studies departments at the national universities of Zambia, Botswana, and Lesotho, and her influence in African universities extended as far north as Nigeria. She remained active through her life in leadership roles for nonprofits in the U.S. and Africa.

She was a consummate classical pianist, sang in the National Opera of Lesotho and in the choir of St. James' Episcopal Church in Austin. She played on the national tennis team of Lesotho, was an avid gardener and art collector, and supported countless children with their educations in Lesotho and South Africa.

Joan and her husband had three children — Dineo, Inonge and the late Letsie “Khotso” Khabele, the founder of Austin's Khabele School — and eight grandchildren.

An educator, activist, musician and avid traveler, Joan was an active member of the Town Lake Chapter of the Links Inc. and served on the boards of the Austin-Maseru Sister Cities Committee, St. Stephen's Episcopal School and the Khabele School (now Headwaters), which was founded by her late son Khotso Khabele.

Joan Means Khabele died in October 2021. She was 78.

Let's hear from Joan in her own words. In an interview with Austin PBS in 2014, Joan spoke about her successful effort to desegregate Barton Springs Pool:

“Barton Springs was a special place because it's freshwater, it's in a beautiful setting. The Park itself was superior. We knew about it, but we knew that we could not go into that water. Period. Historically, Black people were there and they used to swim there. They might've even washed their clothes there for all we know, but then segregation, the Jim Crow era, brought in rules that, “This is for whites only.” There was no park in Austin that we could go to other than Rosewood Park. There was no pool we could swim in other than Rosewood Park pool.

So it was segregated, but then all of that changed with the school integration decision, the Brown v. Board of Education decision of 1954. And Austin decided to go as slowly as possible by starting with the 12th Grade.

Integration came for me in '57 when I left Kealing Junior High and went to Austin High. We were scared to death. We were scared to death because our first day of school was the day after Little Rock and Little Rock really hit the news because Governor Faubus got troops out and, you know, didn't let the Black kids in. And the white parents were shouting at the Black kids, and throwing things at them, and threatening violence, and that was terrible. So the very next day, I came to Austin High.

I had been valedictorian at Kealing, come from my father's a professor at Huston-Tillotson. My mom's an educator, later became a supervisor in the independent school district. So we had a very middle class background. And so I felt, if I'm going to a different school, I should take advantage of everything. So I was known because I joined everything and there were a lot of incidents where horrible things happened because I joined them.

The principal saw me as a sort of leader of the 8 Black kids in my class. He called me in in the spring of 1960 and said, "I see you as a leader of the kids in your class, and I want you to go back to them and tell them that I'm very sorry, but you cannot attend the senior picnic." And everybody had been looking forward to the senior picnic and for eons, that's where Austin had their senior picnics. They had their senior picnics at Zilker Park and swam at Barton Springs. So this was a custom. Now, we had been here for three years. I was upset. I cried. You know, I walked out because he said, "It's the law." These are Jim Crow laws. Nothing he can do about the law. And so I went out and cried and told my friends, "Ah, we're not supposed to go to the senior picnic."

And then started organizing after that and fortunately, I wasn't really thinking about it at the time, but fortunately I brought in some 11th graders, which means once I went off to the University of Chicago, there are still people who can carry on if we failed to open up Barton Springs and Zilker Park.

So what we did was got parents to sign petitions, got students to sign petitions so we had 11th and 12th grades, grade students involved in this. Most of my friends at Austin High were people kind of on the edge like me. They could be Quakers. They could be Unitarians. Jewish, whoever was sort of on the edge of West Austin society as such.

I'm talking about Austin High being a place that was so great that the Governor's children went to Austin High. The legislator's children went to Austin High. The rich folks in West Austin, Tarrytown, you name it, went to Austin High. Very few kids went to private school.

We decided to go to the City Council. I remembered going there without my parents' permission and I think I lied to them that I was at some kind of afterschool activity. We were saying they should open up Barton Springs. Open up Zilker Park. I think we were thinking not only for our picnic but also just open it up. Now, that could raise a lot of blood pressures in the white community of that day.

I kind of slightly remember maybe we were allowed to go to the Park, but never to get into the water. We were not to get into that water and, you know, there's all sorts of ignorance, you know, about getting in too close or in an intimate environment with Black people on the part of whites.

So what we did (after this) was we swam-in. A swim-in is you just jump in and then they come and pull you out. You go around the building. You go back in and you just do this all day. There was no fence around Barton Springs at that time. So I really believe that once we started the swim-in, we got in touch with a couple of university students and before we knew it, University of Texas, Huston-Tillotson, St. Ed's, all kinds of young people joined in this protest.

So that summer, we failed, so this just continued to be swim-in, swim-in, swim-ins. Then the next summer more swim-ins and eventually Beverly Sheffield (Austin Parks and Recreation Director) must've been part of that decision to go ahead to open both Barton Springs and the Park to anybody.

And as far as I know—and this is, I'm not trying to take credit for anything—but as far as I know, this began the activist stage of civil rights in Austin. Before it was, you know, test cases. But opening Barton Springs and Zilker Park, I believe, really started a lot of other things in other areas of the city.”

Today, Barton Springs Pool is the soul of Austin. The crown jewel of our city. It is the gathering place for people from all over Austin and around the world. A true oasis of history, nature, and recreation located in the very heart of Austin. When people think of Austin, they think of Barton Springs. When people visit Barton Springs, they walk through the gates and you can hear them exhale sighs of wonder, “it’s so beautiful”. They are not just talking about the natural beauty of the pool, they see it is a wonderful gathering place that welcomes everyone from all walks of life. It is where we as a community come together to enjoy life with our families, friends and loved ones.

Joan Means Khabele’s vision, leadership skills and courage to make her vision a reality made Barton Springs Pool what it is today. We owe it to her memory, and to everyone who enters the bathhouse, to recognize her significant contributions to the City of Austin. I imagine a photo or work of art of Joan near the entrance of the bathhouse and can see people nodding in silent tribute, throwing her a kiss or waving thank you as they enter the gates and touch the soul of Austin.

I look forward to seeing parents bend down to answer their children’s questions while they wait in line, “Who is that, mom?”

Joan's story embodies what Martin Luther King, Jr., reminded us about when he said “the arc of the moral universe is long, but it bends toward justice.” Gracing the bathhouse with Joan’s name will create moments of reflection that echo the past while propelling us into the future. A young girl once barred from entering the bathhouse due to segregation has now evolved into an enduring symbol of courage, activism, and transformation. Renaming the bathhouse in her honor isn't just a tribute; it's a powerful recognition of the strides we've taken and the path forward we will still tread.

Her actions, like pebbles cast into a pond, have sent ripples that traverse time, touching hearts through the decades and stretching into the uncharted future. When Joan's name graces the bathhouse, a place she was once denied entrance, those ripples of change will reverberate into a resounding legacy. With every footstep through its entrance, visitors will feel the resonance of Joan's stand against segregation—a stand that continues to inspire hearts across generations.

This tribute isn't confined to the past; it's an investment in the future. By honoring Joan in this way, we're making a commitment to a future that mirrors her ideals of equality and inclusivity. Just as her bravery ignited a movement that opened Barton Springs Pool for everyone, this act to rename the bathhouse becomes a constant reminder that progress isn't static—it evolves, adapts, and thrives. Every child walking through doors to Barton Springs Pool, every family gathering by the poolside, will be touched by Joan's spirit, guiding us towards a brighter, more just future for Austin.

Joan Means Khabele's actions are the seeds that continue to germinate and shape Austin's future. Renaming the bathhouse after her isn't merely a celebration of her courage; it's a declaration of our collective dedication to a more inclusive, accessible tomorrow. Her story and the bathhouse's renaming intersect to craft a narrative that extends beyond history—a narrative of progress, inclusivity, and the transformative power of a young girl's actions to weave a new tapestry of community.

Through the doors of the bathhouse, a gateway of inclusivity stands open—a testament that accessibility is not just a concept; it's an embodiment of ideals. Where once the bathhouse symbolized exclusion, it now symbolizes accessibility, welcoming everyone irrespective of their background. Joan's legacy becomes intertwined with the essence of a place that beckons forth a new era, where the barriers of the past give way to the possibilities of the present and future.

As the doors swing open, they swing open to all—a space where equity and unity thrive. Joan's legacy extends beyond the present, casting its influence on tomorrows yet to unfold. Here, individuals from diverse walks of life will convene, connect, and shape a future rooted in access, acceptance, and shared humanity. Joan Means Khabele's story will continue to remind us that one person's unwavering courage and ability to harness the power of her community has the power to ignite change that reverberates through time, inspiring us to stand up for justice and forge a better world for all.

COMMENTS ON BARTON SPRINGS
by Beverly S. Sheffield
February 21, 1993

Barton Springs is like heaven, more a state than a place. That's how many, many devotees of this beautiful water hole feel about it. When one is walking toward the pool and passes a swimmer leaving they often smile at one another and one says, "How's the water today?", and the answer is, "God, it's wonderful!" This sort of interaction just doesn't happen at any other pool.

I made my first swim in Bartons in 1923, when I was 10 years old. In 1934 I began my career in the City Recreation Department as playground leader and lifeguard. I became the first Director of Aquatics in 1935. In those days special events at the Springs included Water Pageants, Bathing Beauty Contests, Swimming exhibitions, Swim apparel style shows, and the annual Forth of July fire works exhibition sponsored by the American Legion and later the Jaycees. Swimming and Red Cross Life Saving classes were taught there too.

In 1940 the Director of Recreation, Jim Garrison, took a leave of absence and I became acting Director. He told me that Barton Springs was a special place and that I had to be sure to take care of it. Frankly, at that time I did not know what he meant. And I did not really get a feel for Bartons until I became a serious swimmer at the Springs and met the many devotees of that beautiful water.... it was like heaven.

Many people don't realize that recreation is important for a full life. There are four things that a person lives by: their work, their love (family), their worship and their play. And the way one plays, their choices of leisure activities are essential for a full and happy life. The euphoria that come from physical recreation, like a mile swim in Bartons, makes one feel good about himself. It gives one a sense of well being.

I didn't really discover my own need for physical recreation until Charlie Morrison's 85th birthday party at the pool. I swam with his party givers to the dam and back and was exhausted. This prompted me to become a serious swimmer. I was 50 years old and decided that now was the time to start taking care of my own body.

I started logging my swims. It took me 80 days to swim the first 50 miles. Then when I completed 200 miles I thought, "My, I've swum all the way to Dallas". Then one day I completed swimming the distance from New York to Los Angeles, 2820 miles in 1714 swim days. Now I'm out in the Pacific heading for Hawaii.

I am always fascinated by the number of people who drive out to Bartons just to take a few minutes to look at the springs. This happens over and over again, regardless of the weather. There is a magic attraction to the water that the general public love and appreciate. Yes, even non swimmers.

My family has been told that when I die to cremate my body and sprinkle some of the ashes in Bartons. Yes, Bartons is like heaven.

As Director of the Park and Recreation the first time that I realized the need to protect Barton Springs was in the middle fifties. A large number of homes were built along Bluebonnet Lane and in the area that drained into what we call "Rabb Creek" which empties into the middle of the swimming pool. The trash and liter that was flushed down this drainage way was awful. Sometimes we would find small dead animals in the pool. And it happen each time a small rain shower hit that section of the city. One year we closed the pool about 30 times due to the dirty water that flooded into the pool from Rabb creek. The city finally built a by-pass to carry this runoff below the lower dam of the pool.

Developers began negotiating for the Rabb Tract in the early fifties. This land encompasses much of the Barton Hills subdivision. The late Walter Seaholm, City Manager, told me to lay out a golf course for that land. We gave the City Council the plan and they did not see fit to purchase the land. We did buy the creek bottom up to Campbells hole.

About this same time, the late Robert Mueller, former locker boy at Bartons and later cashier, offered to sell a strip of land, about 40-50 acres, lying on the South side of the creek from the pool to Campbell hole. Again the City Council did not come up with the funds to gain control of this valuable piece of land.

In the middle sixties Austin's first environmental group organized under the leadership of Mrs. Charles "Bobby" Crenshaw and Russell Fish. They brought their concerns about Barton Creek to me and our Park planners, headed by Don Stence, drew up a plan for a green belt up Barton Creek. Nothing substantial came from this effort except it began to create some citizen interest in extending Zilker Park up Barton Creek.

Our staff decided that the Park and Recreation Department should investigate the possibility of creating a soil erosion project on Barton Creek. This is a program of the U.S. Agriculture Department that develops small flood control dams on a creek to check run off. Private land owners must give permission for their land to be flooded and if they wanted a permanent body of water they would have to supply the funds for a higher dam.

We held two meetings with representatives from the City, State and Federal officials and land owners to discuss the merits of the flood control dams. The talks broke down because I could not get the City Manager, the late W.T. Williams to support the idea. For the project to be created it was necessary to have it sponsored by a political entity.

It was always my thought that the development immediately above the Springs was bad only because of sight pollution. We could build a by-pass around the pool for the runoff water. What we really needed to do was spend every dollar that we could get for land above the first sink hole that recharges the aquifer. I remember how disappointed I was when the $750,000 paid by the AISD to the City for the part of Zilker Park that was used for the new Stephen F. Austin High School, was not used to extend Zilker Park up Barton Creek. When I wanted to budget all of these funds for land purchase up Barton Creek the City Manager's office told me we had to use the money for a new golf course, a new district park, a new swimming pool etc.

At the time when I saw several ideas for creating a Barton Creek greenbelt go unheeded there was no Barton Creek posse and for many years we not even had a Parks and Recreation Board. There was no one for me to talk too.

Interactive center will focus on aquifer, Barton - Austin American-Statesman (TX) - June 16, 1997 - page B1

June 16, 1997 | Austin American-Statesman (TX) | Kelli Walker; AUSTIN AMERICAN-STATESMAN | Page B1

Barton Springs is a little slice of heaven on Earth.

That's what Beverly S. Sheffield, 84, tells anyone who will listen to him half a second.

``It does something for your heart and your soul," Sheffield said. ``It's like I say: Barton Springs is like heaven, more a state than a place."

The Old Bathhouse at Barton Springs Pool last month was renamed the Beverly S. Sheffield Education Center. The center will open in October, featuring an Austin Nature Center exhibit called ``Splash into the Edwards Aquifer." The exhibit will be interactive and educational, with a focus on the aquifer and Barton Springs.

Sheffield, a longtime parks director who dreamed up the Zilker Christmas Tree, sees the new exhibit as a chance to show everyone how special Central Texas is to have such an aquifer.

``I think it's amazing what they're going to do," Sheffield said. ``It will be, like they say, state of the art."

Sheffield, a San Antonio native, moved to Austin in 1932 and hasn't moved since. Austin, he says, has a unique hold on people.

And as the city continues to attract more and more people, Sheffield says he fears for the future of the springs. Sheffield has seen patterns during the years that disturb him; the condition of the springs after a rain, for instance, has become worse.

``I'm very pessimistic about the future of the springs," Sheffield said. ``I hope we can protect the quality of water."

When not away visiting friends and family, Sheffield can be found at least two or three times a week taking a dip in the 68-degree waters of Barton Springs. Sheffield, who has been married to his wife, Lois, for 57 years, says hello to other regulars, greeting his female friends at the pool with a cheek-to-cheek gesture.

His first swim was in 1923, but he did not become a devotee of the pool until more than 30 years ago.

``When I stand there ready to plunge in, whether it's 35 degrees or 100 degrees (outside), I say, `You're a damned fool,'" Sheffield said. ``It's cold! But after I plunge in there, I say, `Oh, this feels so good.'"

Cindy Giedraitis, a site supervisor with the Austin Nature and Science Center, said when she met Sheffield two years ago, she couldn't believe the slender, gray-haired man ``with a spring in his step" was in his 80s.

``He just had this healthy vitality in his eyes and his swimmer's body," Giedraitis said. ``He seemed more energetic than I."

Giedraitis said many people in the Parks and Recreation Department admire Sheffield and know him as a person who did much for Austin.

``He's a legend," Giedraitis said. ``He was one of the longest-serving parks directors. He really had the chance to see Austin grow."

Sheffield worked for the City of Austin for more than 40 years and was director of recreation from 1946 to 1962. It was his idea to string lights from a tower to create the Zilker Christmas Tree. When the Parks Department and the Recreation Department merged, he was named director of the Parks and Recreation Department for 10 more years.

After retiring in 1978 from the City of Austin, Sheffield went back to work as a founder of Austin Community Foundation, a nonprofit corporation that receives donations and gives them to charities. He retired again in 1987.

``He's given (Austin) a lifetime of service," said Craig Biddle, a friend of eight years. ``He took a lot of pride in his job and initiated so many programs that have become integral in our community."

Would you like to provide your endorsement to rename the Bathhouse at Barton Springs Pool to the Joan Means Khabele Bathhouse at Barton Springs Pool?

If you would like to endorse the renaming proposal, please enter your name here.

Joan Means Khabele was an important civic leader, and she deserves recognition. Beyond that, renaming the Bathhouse is a way to make Austin's civil rights history known to all residents. The fact that most Austin residents do not know that Barton Springs, in spite of being in the area of one of the Freedmen's Communities that was affected by the 1928 Master Plan, was closed to African Americans within the lifetimes of many people living today.

I am pleased that the City considers honoring the desegregation efforts at Barton Springs, though I am pretty sure it will continue to be referred as "the Barton Springs Bathhouse". In view of that, let's make sure there is a statue of Ms. Khabele, a plaque or any other way to prominently display her background and the actions she took.

Barton Springs WAS racist. Black people were not allowed to swim there. Let's honor a hero that changed that.

I support this nomination. The history of segregation, racism and civil rights in Austin is not sufficiently discussed or taught. I was a student at Austin High and frequented Barton Springs with no idea about what Ms. Khabele had done to desegregate Barton Springs, herself an Austin High student. This is something every student should know and understand, they can relate to this story and we should hold up her bravery as an example.

👍 5 Agree

I am positive that Ms. Khabele was an important and brave civic leader deserving of recognition. However in 1987 the Parks & Recreation Board recommended and the Austin City Council approved a resolution (#870319-15) that the bathhouse to be named for Mr B.J. (Buster) Robinson, a long time city employee with years of service at Barton Springs and Zilker Park. I strongly support leaving the name as the former Parks and Recreation Board and Austin City Council approved.

I support the renaming of Barton Springs bathhouse. Joan Means Khabele was an impressive woman who holds a rather significant moment in the history of Barton Springs Pool. It would be honorable to hold a space for her and her legacy. Her transformative action at the Barton Springs Pool all came from a moment's decision that one could possibly argue impacted the direction of the rest of her life's work and achievements. God Bless those whose moment of courage sparked important events that contribute to our history and development as a society. May we honor them and never forget.

I think it's an important ameliorative gesture that will signal to diverse audiences what our values are here and what heroes we elevate as role models. This is an important opportunity. I hope the bathhouse design is equal to the honor of being named for Joan.

I am confused about the renaming of the Barton Springs Bathhouse. It is my family's understanding that the entrance to the pool including the offices/ basket room was named after our grandfather Buster John Robinson several years ago. The parks board and city council gave him that honor for his many years of service to the city of Austin and the building of Barton's Springs pool. There is a plaque is on the wall at the entrance to the pool showing that. Buster laid the stones creating the lower dam, and then spent the next 30+ years working to create the pool and park that are now the gem of Austin. While I do believe that Joan Means Khabele deserves recognition for her courageous role in Barton Springs history, I have to wonder if it is appropriate to erase the name of a man who dedicated his life to Zilker Park and Barton's to replace it with hers?

I wholeheartedly endorse the renaming of Barton Springs Bathhouse in honor of Joan Means Khabele, a distinguished leader in our city who herself defied exclusionary policies like the ones which closed Barton Springs to Black Austinites. This necessary change not only acknowledges the historical injustice of segregation but also pays tribute to a trailblazer who tirelessly advocated for equality, making Austin a more inclusive and equitable community for all.

It's a step in the right direction. Barton Springs still has predominantly white visitors. Let's change that.

Barton Springs is a landmark and old Austin tradition. I never thought it was racist, just an iconic Austin place to go swimming. Is renaming Austin next?

I fully support this name change as a Barton springs guard, people need to remember history and from what I've read, Ms. Khabele is more than deserving of this nomination.

Honoring the person who helped de-segregate Barton Springs by naming the bathhouse after her is important because we need to voice our support for anti-racist policies. By naming the bathhouse for an Black Activist we are supporting our Black community.

Joan Means Khabele is a gine example of commemorations, please cut through the red tape necessary to implement this positive change, something that should not financially encumber the city and should be fairly easy to implement.

The bathhouse is not named for anyone right now. Naming it for Joan Means Khabele would be a great honor for the City of Austin. She earned this recognition! She set in motion the effort to end segregationist policies at the pool that were enforced by Austin Parks and Recreation. She showed great courage when she jumped into the pool after being told she could not swim there because of her race. She got kicked out and came back over and over. There are two rooms used in the past as basket rooms and the old office inside the bathhouse that are named for Buster Robinson. Naming the Bathhouse for Joan Means Khabele will not change the name of the rooms named for Mr Robinson. In fact, naming the bathhouse for her and keeping the three rooms inside named for Mr Robinson will symbolize the great change that Joan brought about at the pool. Mr Robinson served from 1928-1961. Segregation ended at the pool in 1962, the year after Mr Robinson retired, because of the swim-ins Joan started organizing in 1960. It is time for her name to adorn the bathhouse at Barton Springs Pool!

I would like to endorse this proposal to name the bathhouse for an Austin heroine, Joan Means Khabele. She saw injustice and she changed it. And she was only 18 at the time.

Honoring the witness of Joan Means Khabele in a public way is so important. It's part of telling the whole story of our history, both of White supremacy and courageous Black leadership. If we are seriously considering renaming the Springs, I wonder if we ought to be asking Indigenous folks in our area to name it.

Thank you for allowing us to make comments on this issue ...as a life long swimmer of Barton Springs and of Mexican descent, I and my family were very welcome there and lived right up the hill in Barton Heights until recently...we attended Zilker Elementary, Porter Jr. High & Crockett High with the Robinson boys & led charming lives! If there is a name change, I would personally be honored if the Native American families who settled there over 10,000 years ago ... the true founders of our beautiful and beloved swimming hole!

If you would like to provide additional feedback or comments about the proposal to rename the Bathhouse to the Joan Means Khabele Bathhouse, please share here.

Leave it at Barton Springs. The place and identity of the spring is stronger than the namesake family. No reasonable person associates the family with the spring. It is, independently Barton Springs to the world. Naming buildings, parks and roads after humans is absurd -- we are all flawed. Leave it alone. Stop eradicating old Austin!

I have heard the story of the swim-ins firsthand from my dear friend Sandra Kirk, who also helped desegregate Barton Springs Pool. The story she has told me has made the eventful days very vivid. I think that it's very important that on the original email sent to everyone that information about Joan Means Khabele is placed on that page as well. I also hope and ask with the strongest request I could possibly make that there be a plaque front and center. That explains exactly why the bathhouse is named after her. Just naming it after her is not enough. As hard as it may be for many in Austin to admit to, it should absolutely be acknowledged the mistakes that we made as a white community. So just naming it after her, there's not enough. Thank you for reading and listening.

My name is Jeff Robinson. The bathhouse, or at least a portion of the bathhouse, is currently named after my grandfather, Buster Robinson. He worked for over 30 years creating the Barton Springs we know and love. My father, Jack Robinson, was also the supervisor of Zilker Park and subsequently, Director of Parks and Recreation for the city of Austin. He and I both grew up in the Zilker Park Supervisors cottage. The Austin Parks and Recreation office is also currently named after my father. I recognize the current trend to rename things because of past wrongs, but I can think of no better name for the Barton Springs Bathhouse than the current name of Buster Robinson. Below is the text from the plaque that is currently mounted on the bathhouse wall.

Buster Robinson Center

Buster Robinson served Austin for more than 30 years in Zilker Park. His first love was Barton Springs and he was devoted to the quality of life in Austin.

Barton Springs should be renamed. William Barton only lived on the land surrounding the springs for 3 years and "was known as a fearless and skillful Indian fighter." He owned slaves as well.

Doesn't seem like Barton contributed much good to the community. If he did contribute some good to the community, maybe there'd be an argument to keep the name. Andrew Zilker, for instance, apparently held confederate generals in high regard but he also realized the importance of public education and realized the natural beauty of the area belongs to the public so donated it to the city. He wasn't perfect but at least he contributed some good to the community. Barton, on the other hand, didn't do much except take land from indigenous peoples, kill them, and then sell the land a few years later
